This book is designed to list references in the Bahá'í Faith along with the quotation. There are additional inspirational and newsworthy readings and sites on the topic of American Indians and the Bahá'í Faith in the Star of the West, Bahá'í World Volumes, the United States Bahá'í News, Supplement to the U.S. Bahá'í News, The American Bahá'í and World Order Magazines. The information I have selected to place here is only to help the reader reference the work on American Indians quickly. It does not appear in full sentences for much of the time. And for the majority of the time, I have kept the spelling as it appears in the original work. I have interpreted American Indian for this purpose to mean any articles reporting American Indians in the United States, Alaska, Canada, South and Central America. Sometimes the word Indian was not in the article. Still I have included articles for when it came to particular activities, it was clear (to me) that they were talking about Indians. I have attempted to include the names of Indian believers as I knew them or if they appeared in the print. This is not to favor them in any inappropriate way but rather to show who was involved, their tribes, and the fact that they were involved. One of my hopes is that this book will be helpful to those who will write the future books about Indian Bahá'í communities, how they got started, and their development. I believe that is more how Indians will write and not about any one particular person. When it came to South America, I have to admit being quite ignorant. So I had to rely on what was there for spelling etc. None the less, the information should lead you to some pretty affirming reading.

I have also included Books, Booklets, Pamphlets, Films, Reports, Cassettes, DVD's, And Videos which relate to the topic. Some of these sources I knew of because I know the people while others were found various ways including using the Bahá'í Bibliographic Database. This database can be accessed through the creator: William Collins, wpc09@hotmail.com.

And finally, there is a section on the Programs at the Association for Bahá'í Studies for North America.
